DESCRIPTION

Yellahead's down home crazy. Even if you just met him it'll take you about five seconds to figure it out. Yellahead grew up in a family of seriously whacked out Jemima's witnesses that had their holy doo-rags on way too tight. Yellahead not only dislikes the Hoomanrace with all the zeal and righteous indignation of a fanatic, but he's convinced that they're still around despite overwhelmingly sane evidence to the contrary. Yellahead is immersed in conspiracy theories filled and is convinced that the descendents of the Hoomanrace are watching his every move and can read his mind unless he wears his "thought shield" (a hat made out of tin foil, coat hangers, and filled with dead bugs). If anyone even pays attention to his ramblings he'll go on for hours and present them with "compelling first-hand evidence" of the Hoomanrace's clandestine plan to re-assert themselves as the rulers of Oith. Yellahead has great aspirations of joining the Jemima's Witnesses as a frontline soldier for their cause but isn't quite there yet.

Yellahead has seriously ticked off the local Hoomanitarian chapter by staging protests outside of their temple and made their official "list" when he was caught graffito-tagging their temple with crude pictures of Cremefillians whizzing on the Hoomanrace. The Hoomanitarians used to just write him off as a harmless nutcase but now they make sure that he keeps his distance.

Yellahead, although thoroughly deluded, has a very strong sense of self and has outstanding potential as a contaminator. He's currently scraping together all the clams he can to get some cool weapons to equip a contanimatronic minion capable of beating up Hoomanitarians. Stick it to the man!
